"Chi-town's long running CHEER-ACCIDENT are classification-defying experimentalists... on the fringes of progressive rock, art-pop, and noise, whose M.O. has been one of constant reinvention". - BANDCAMP DAILY

STREET DATE: FEBRUARY 18TH, 2022

ALSO FROM CHEER-ACCIDENT

"...worth deliberate investigation." - NPR / FRESH AIR

"In the end, this album does not reach the heights of "Introducing Lemon" or "Fear Draws Misfortune", but for anyone who already likes the band, it is worth picking up, and you can't really go wrong owning this album - although I would still recommend "Fear Draws Misfortune" as the starting point if you are looking to get into this Chicago-based band".

- The Gazzardian (writing about the 2006 album "What Sequel?" over at Prog Archives)

In the sixteen years that have passed since the review above, Cheer-Accident have put off death, then faded out, and now... "Here Comes The Sunset"- ??? When will all of this ending end, you ask? Well, Cheer-Accident's unending series of endings comes to a close (yet again) with their 24th album – brand new for 2022 – on Friday, February 18th.

What gives? - Peeking through the earglass, it sounds like we've got some cutup / schismatic Plastic R&B, something vaguely resembling Eurodance, a coupla minutes of Prog, a dash of melancholia, and a would-be (you know, right up until the "middle section") faithful rendition of a famous song by their fellow (but less drably attired) Midwestern rock band, Cheap Trick.

Join us for a gloriously dismal time as Cheer-Accident's constitution collapses upon itself once again. You CAN go wrong listening to this. You can go exactly this wrong.

"(Cheer-Accident) fold as many abstruse styles into their songs as possible - without collapsing into a nightmare tangle – and strike a keen balance between angularity and tunefulness - performed with incredible skill and precision." – The WIRE
